Mysterious Bombing Kills One

NEW YORK (UPI) -- A mysterious bombing -- the second of its kind within 24 hours in the metropolitan area -- killed a young trucking company employe Thursday as he stepped on the starter of his car outside his Forest Hills luxury apartment.

The victim was Kenneth Feinberg, 26, a checker for the Fox Trucking Co. in Manhattan and son of a wealthy downtown furrier.

Police were at a loss for a motive in the case although they said the young man was known to have had friends "who were not exactly upright, law-abiding citizens."

They also did not dismiss the possibility the bomb planted in the Feinberg auto actually was meant for the father, Hyman Feinberg, in whose name the car was registered.

The blast tore the car to junk and hurled shrapnel--like fragments for hundreds of feet around the quiet, fashionable neighborhood not far from the plush West Side Tennis Club where the Forest Hills championships are held.

Dozens of windows were smashed by the shock of the explosion, but a home-by-home check by firemen who sped to the scene did not turn up any other casualties.
