MR. SAM RAYBURN

Was As Good
As They Come

BONHAM UPI--"It's sort of like losing the courthouse." "I feel I am a member of the family." "As a fisherman, he was pretty good. As a man, he was as good as they come."

Those were some of the sentiments Sam Rayburn's friends and neighbors expressed today when they heard he was dead. Rayburn had lived in Bonham, a town of about 10,000 residents, since he was a boy.

When he came home on holidays and when Congress was adjourned, his friends in Bonham called him "Sam" or "Mr. Sam," depending upon how old they were and how well they knew him. That was the way he wanted it.

He asked to be brought home to die among his friends and neighbors. They knew he was going to die and yet it did little to soften the blow when he did.

WARMLY PRAISED

These are some of the things "Mr. Sam's" friends said when they heard he was gone: J. C. Magouirk, mayor - "It's sort of like losing the courthouse. Oh, we're going to miss him. We've always leaned on him for everything. Imposed on him, I guess you'd say. I can't say anything that would nearly express how I feel about Mr. Sam's death."

Joe Risser, Rayburn's physician - "I can't remember when I didn't know Mr. Sam."

Joe Kincaid, postman - "I hadn't seen Mr. Sam since the Easter holidays. He didn't look good then --- he looked older. I went fishing with him some. As a fisherman, I'd say he was pretty good. As a man, he was as good as they come."
