Bus Overturms; 3 Killed, 10 Hurt

WOODBURY, Tenn. (UPI) - A violent gust of wind caught a Trailways bus at the crest of an icy hill Friday, rolling it down a 300 foot embankment and trapping passengers inside. Three persons were killed and nine injured.

The accident occurred at 8:55 a.m. on a twisting, mountainous stretch of highway between Knoxville and Nashville while most of the 12 passengers aboard were dozing in their seats. The big red and gray vehicle flipped over repeatedly in its plunge down the rugged grade and finally came to rest wheels-up.

"The bus began to turn over and over. It tossed seats around and people were flying," said Harold Wright of Guntersville, Ala., one of the injured passengers.

Wright and another passenger, John Williams of St. Louis, Mo., managed to crawl out broken windows when the bus finally came to a stop.

Williams said he grabbed a luggage rack to try to keep from being tossed around when the bus went down the embankment.

"But that didn't help," he said. Rescuers worked for more than an hour in bitter freezing temperatures getting the others out.

The vehicle was battered to the extent that crowbars were needed to pry open the doors.

Hiram Young of Woodbury, a passerby, discovered the accident and notified authorities.

Ambulances were rushed from nearby Woodbury and McMinnville and wreckers were called to right the vehicle.

Rescuers carried some of the injured up the icy slope on stretchers. Others made it up on their own.

Lonnie Stewart of Sparta, Tenn. and Robert C. White of Burlington, N. C. were dead on arrival at area hospitals. Stewart's wife died about four hours after the crash.
