Young woman killed in train-car collision

A 19-year-old Grand Prairie woman was killed in Irving Tuesday when her car was hit by a train, Irving police said.

Cheryl Joan Freeland was driving north on Belt Line Road in a 1981 Honda Civic about 1:40 p.m. as an eastbound train approached. Police said the train's warning whistle blew and the railroad crossing lights flashed.

Witnesses told police it appeared the car "simply tried to beat out the train."

Police said the train, carrying 45 railroad cars, was unable to stop. It struck the car on the driver's side and dragged it 952 feet, reports indicate.

Ms. Freeland was taken to Parkland Memorial Hospital and was pronounced dead at 3:42 p.m.

While one police report gave Ms. Freeland's address as 3561 Portland St. in Irving, an officer said she had recently moved back to 2827 Nina in Grand Prairie.
