Passenger in car dies from gunshot

May 24
1982

By BOB RENNELS

A 29-year-old Irving man died early Wednesday from a gunshot wound to the head sustained while he and a co-worker were riding home from a Dallas nightclub.

Larry Hatridge was a passenger in a car driven by his friend and fellow employee, Kaoru Hirano, 26, of Irving, police said.

Hirano told police he was driving along Northwest Highway near the Centennial Liquor Store in Dallas when he heard a loud noise he thought was another car backfiring.

Hirano asked Hatridge a question, but Hatridge failed to reply. When Hirano glanced at his passenger, he noticed blood on Hatridge's arm.

Hirano drove to Walnut Hill Lane in Irving, where he flagged down a Las Colinas security officer.

Irving police were called and a preliminary investigation showed Hatridge had been shot once in the head.

Investigators found a bullet hole in the windshield of the car and another hole above the back seat, where the bullet apparently lodged.

Irving paramedics took Hatridge to Parkland Memorial Hospital. Hatridge was pronounced dead at 1:22 a.m., a hospital spokeswoman said.

The two men worked at NEC America Inc. in Las Colinas, according to Hirano, who said he had been training Hatridge to be an engineer.

Hirano said he planned to leave for a vacation in Japan tomorrow, and that Hatridge had invited him out for a drink before he left.

"I wanted to go to the Playboy Club, but it was closed. We went to the Hyatt Regency and I had a whiskey. Then we went to the (Loews) Anatole Hotel, but we didn't stay there.

"We went to the Bachelor's Club of Dallas (9615 Overlake Drive). We stayed for forty minutes, but there were no people around there," Hirano said.

Hirano said he didn't know why Hatridge was shot.

"Someone did it, but I'm not sure why it happened. Nothing happened at the bar," Hirano stated.

Dallas police, who impounded Hirano's 1981 Chevrolet Citation, are investigating the shooting.

A Dallas detective assigned to the case could not be reached for comment this morning.
