FW man dies, suicide alleged

FORT WORTH — A former FBI employee placed his house with gasoline and gunpowder, apparently intending to blow it up, and then shot himself to death in his car, police said today.

The body of Bishop L. Gunter, 63, was found Sunday evening in the front seat of his car in the garage of his home. He had been shot once in the head, said police spokesman Doug Clarke.

Clarke said police had identified Gunter as a former employee of the FBI, but he did not know if what capacity. No motive for Gunter's apparent suicide had been determined.

Officers called to Gunter's home Sunday evening found a hose running from the tailpipe through a taped front window of his car.

They also found large amounts of gasoline and a trail of gunpowder throughout the house and what was believed to be a timing device attached to an electrical cord, Clarke said. The city's electrical utility turned off all power to the house and firefighters opened up the house and used fans to clear out the gasoline fumes. There was no explosion.
