‘Quiet man’ held in shooting death of son

When Ralph Wilson saw an ambulance arrive at his neighbors’ home Thanksgiving evening, his first thought was that the woman living in the house had succumbed to a terminal illness, which Wilson had just heard about that day.

But that neighbor, Mary Blair, was all right. Instead, the ambulance attendants were removing the body of her son Jimmie Dale Blair, 45, the victim of gunshots allegedly fired by his 67-year-old father, Delmos.

On Saturday, as Delmos Blair remained in the city jail in lieu of $20,000 bond, neighbors continued to characterize the retired Bell Helicopter employee as a “quiet man” and friendly neighbor.

Investigators said Delmos Blair was apparently disturbed after learning last week that his wife Mary was terminally ill.

Mary Blair was recently diagnosed as having stomach cancer and told that she had only a few weeks to live, according to published reports.

The shooting apparently occurred shortly after the family’s holiday meal Thursday.

The older Blair suddenly became angry at his son and ran into his bedroom, returning moments later with a gun which he fired at his son, police said.

The younger man died from two gunshot wounds to his head and neck, said officials at the Dallas County Medical Examiner’s office.

Blair then instructed family members to call the police, according to reports.

Earlier in the day Blair confided to his neighbor, Wilson, about his wife’s illness.

When Wilson saw an ambulance arrive outside the Blairs’ house Thursday night, he ran outside to see if he could help.

“My first thought was that Mrs. Blair had died. I knew she was sick with cancer. Mr. Blair had told me about her condition earlier that day. He said he didn’t expect to have her around very long. But when they brought the stretcher out I knew it wasn’t her,” Wilson said.

Once he spotted police taking photographs inside the house, Wilson knew for certain something else was wrong.

The surprise came when Wilson learned that police had arrested Blair for the killing.

Wilson said Blair was apparently under severe emotional strain caused by his wife’s illness.

He described Blair as a “rather quiet man who liked to do odd jobs for neighbors to keep himself busy.”

When asked about neighborhood reaction to the tragedy, Wilson said he felt most people were still unaware of the shooting.

“Several of the families around here are older, retired people. They had already gone to bed before it happened,” he said.

The Blairs had moved into the house across the street from Wilson about three or four years ago, the neighbor said.

Wilson noted Blair once built him a fence, while he cut down a few trees for Blair in return.

what I could tell.

Another neighbor, who requested anonymity, characterized Blair and his wife as “two good, hard-working people,” who were friendly and pleasant to be around.

The neighbor said she was shocked when told of the incident Friday.
