Memory of sons endures

Mother of two young fire victims copes with tragedy

By LEE GRANT
Daily News Staff

~~A small box of cherished treasures is all Sue Miksza has left of her two sons.~~

But these days she clings to the old snapshots and those bittersweet memories.

She remembers the night her oldest son, Stan, came home at 1 a.m., two hours late from his concession stand job at Arlington Stadium. Stan was the responsible child — the dependable elder son. When he promised to be home by 6 p.m. he held true to his word. So as the hours passed Miksza found herself becoming panicky: — Stan finally arrived, late, but safe and beaming from ear to ear. After the baseball game Stan had experienced a thrill some avid Texas Ranger baseball fans only dream about: an opportunity to meet members of the Rangers' team.

Friends, classmates offer sympathies to boys' family

She remembers the night Clint walked into her bedroom as she prepared for work. She and her husband, Gary White, had been working long hours on the late shift to save money for Stan's college education fund.

Clint stared at his mother and commented that she looked exhausted. The mother admitted she was indeed tired, but assured him it was only a temporary condition. Eventually the long hours would end and the family could look forward to spending more time together.

Miksza enjoyed the deep nights shift in one sense, because it allowed her to spend more quality time with her children.

"He looked at me and said, 'You know, you're the best mother in the whole world, and I love you.' He was a very sensitive kid and was not ashamed to show his emotions. He had a knack of always seeming to know the right thing to say and when," she said.

Only a few hours after their conversation 11-year-old Clint and his 14-year-old brother, Stan, died when a fire erupted in their house.

The fire which claimed her sons' lives Feb. 1 took with it her link to the past. Destroyed were years of accumulated photographs detailing the boys' lives. Photographs which the mother can never replace. Gone are Stan's honor roll certificates and other prized possessions.

Miksza is asking anyone who might have school photographs, or video tapes of her sons taken during school and city league football games, or gymnastics events to share them with her. Anyone with photographs they wish to make copies of for the family is asked to call Miksza at 594-8226.

Some items were destroyed in the fire, but others disappeared without any explanation.

"Stan collected bicentennial quarters. He had nearly $100 worth of them; but after the fire we couldn't find any trace of them. His wallet was gone too and that hurts, because he kept all of his honor cards in his wallet and I would like to have them," she said.

Family members found most of Sue Miksza's jewelry right where she had left it. But noticeably absent from the same area was an emerald ring and her diamond wedding band. Also discovered missing was their clothes washer and dryer.

News of the children's deaths brought an outpouring of sympathy from the children's friends and classmates. Hand-drawn cards and letters from Stan and Clint's school friends are among the mother's most prized possessions.

Among the cards is a simple construction paper folder which reads, "We'll remember Clint" and is signed, "Your fifth grade class." Inside the folder are individual letters written by his W.T. Hanes Elementary classmates in which they express their feelings for Clint.

"He was the class clown," Miksza said. "His goal was to make everyone happy. One of the kids at his school wrote and said he was going to miss Clint, because he always made him smile and laugh," she said.

What hurts Sue the most is the fact her children were struck down so early in their young lives.

"They had so much promise for the future. Their deaths are such a waste. Stan had planned to go to Baylor (University) and become an orthodontist. He would laugh and say, 'I'm going to be rich by the time I'm 28, and then I'm going to take care of you and dad.' And he would have been successful in anything he chose. He was a very bright kid," she said.

Miksza described Stan as an intellectual, "a thinker" who enjoyed watching documentaries. He loved school and excelled in his studies. He threw himself into each school project, making sure all of his work was thorough.

Stan's grades reflected his desire to learn and achieve. Sue Miksza received a shock a few weeks after Stan's death when she glanced through the newspaper and found her son's name in its usual place on the Irving High School honor roll list.

She described Stan as being very mature for his age.

"I think he felt like he had to be more responsible, because he was the older brother," she said.

While Stan kept his emotions locked up inside, Clint was never afraid to show his, Miksza said.

"He was more sensitive, but he was as tough as a brick house. He was small and I think he felt he had to be tough to make up for his lack of physical size. He looked up to Stan and wanted to be like his brother. They were so different, but so much alike," she said.

On Thursday, a brass plaque was unveiled at St. Monica School in Dallas in memory of the two boys. Stan attended the school for two years prior to transferring to the Irving public school system. Although he had left the school years earlier, the faculty still remembered their former student, Miksza said.

The children were buried in Dixon, N.C., and funeral expenses amounted to more than $12,000. A trust fund has been established at Texas American Bank, 5601 N. MacArthur Blvd. to help raise money to pay off the funeral bills. So far, donors have contributed about $3,000 to the fund.

Anyone who wishes to contribute to the fund can contact the bank. The account number is 3030152.

Miksza has learned to live her life minute by minute. At times the tears come uncontrollably when special days such as Easter come around, or this coming Monday when Stan would have celebrated his 15th birthday.

"Little things that you wouldn't think about get to you. Things like going shopping and seeing a shirt, or a pair of jeans and thinking, 'Stan would have liked that,' or looking for a one-bedroom apartment, instead of a three-bedroom apartment. Or going to the grocery store and passing the cereal and candy aisles. Then seeing other families getting ready for Easter and... it's hard. They don't give any classes on how to deal with this," she said.

Since the children's deaths Sue has received telephone calls from other parents who have heard about her loss. Because of the tragedy these families have taken the time to install smoke alarms, and check the electrical wiring in their homes a bit closer. Others have loosened burglar bars to make sure their children are alerted and can escape should a fire ever occur.
