Toxicology results awaited in drowning of 4-year-old

The cause of death of a 4-year-old Irving boy who apparently drowned Sunday while bathing is pending the results of a toxicology test, a spokesman for the Dallas County medical examiner's office said Tuesday.

The results of the test, which determines if toxic substances are in the blood, could take several weeks to obtain, the spokesman said.

Trevor Barbee was pronounced dead about 2 p.m. at The Irving Hospital after his father, police and paramedics tried for more than an hour to revive him. February 11, 1990

The boy's father, Jim Barbee, told police he had been checking on his son, who was bathing at their apartment in the 1300 block of Parkridge Boulevard, every two or three minutes.

He checked on the child about 12:40 p.m. and then went to another room to call his daughters, police said.

He picked up a few items in the living room and went to check on the child again, police said.

The 4-year-old was floating face down in the bathtub, police said. Barbee pulled the plug to let out the water and grabbed his son, police said.

He performed cardiopulmonary resuscitation until two officers arrived and took over the efforts. The boy regained some color and paramedics found a pulse, but further attempts to revive him were unsuccessful, police said.

The boy had been suffering from a respiratory infection at the time of his death, reports said.

Husband kills wife at salon

□ Murder/suicide shocks employees, owner of MacArthur business

By LAURIE BARNETT

An apparent domestic dispute resulted in a murder/suicide Friday morning when a 49-year-old Irving man shot and killed his 40-year-old wife and then shot himself outside an Irving hair salon, police said.

Veda Jean Beyler, manager of Economy Cuts, 1211 S. MacArthur Blvd., died from multiple gunshot wounds, according to Capt. T.J. Hall of the Irving Police Department. Her husband of six years, John Raymond Beyler, shot himself once in the head, Hall said.

Both were pronounced dead at the scene.

A woman who arrived at the salon about 9:15 a.m. for an appointment told police that she saw a man shoot Mrs. Beyler. Hall said the woman ran to a nearby fast-food restaurant to call police.

"A lady who had a hair appointment went up there, to the salon door, and saw him shoot her," Hall said. "She then ran to a restaurant and could see the front of the store all the time, and no one left."

Mrs. Beyler was the first worker to arrive, Hall said. The salon, which usually opens at 9 a.m., still had its "closed" sign showing when police arrived.

Hall said Mrs. Beyler's body was found just inside the door.

Police said late Friday that their investigation was continuing and that details were sketchy. But the salon owner and two employees said Friday morning that Beyler had no identification on him and that someone saw his car near the scene.

The employees, however, identified the man as Beyler.

The employees said the couple had been having marital problems and recently had separated.

Employee Samantha DuBose, visibly shaken after being the first worker to arrive at the scene of Friday's shooting.
Shooting:

Wife killed by husband

After the shooting, said Mrs. Beyler told her that her husband said he would kill her.

"She had said that he told her 9-year-old daughter that he was going to kill her mommy," Dubose said.

Dubose also said that Mrs. Beyler recently had taken her daughter to Tennessee to stay with relatives. Tony Mitchell, a friend of Dubose's, said that Beyler had told the child to take a picture of her mother with her because it would be the last time she saw her.

Ella Foster, the salon owner, said she had been told that the couple was having problems, but said she did not know things were that serious.

"I had no idea this would happen," she said. "I have been in the hair-cutting business for the past six years, and this is the first time we have had anything like this happen. They just had domestic problems and chose to do it here. It didn't have anything to do with the business."

Officers remove Veda Jean Beyler's body from Economy Cuts, while a stretcher in the background awaits her husband's body.

Worker killed at GTE job site

A 33-year-old Grand Prairie man was killed Friday afternoon when he was caught in a turning cement truck at an Irving construction site, police said. January 26, 1990

James Brasewell was washing out the truck after he dropped off a load of cement at the 400 W. Carpenter Freeway site, where workers are constructing the new headquarters for GTE Telephone Operations, Irving police Lt. Kim Roe said.

Authorities did not know late Friday how Brasewell got caught inside the truck. Workers continued into the evening trying to extract the worker's body, which was trapped from the shoulders down in the truck.

Irving police and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration are investigating the accident.
Head injuries killed worker, police say

A worker's death in a churning cement mixer at the GTE construction site Friday was caused by head injuries and multiple upper-body cuts, Irving police Lt. Don Carr said Saturday.

James Carl Brasewell, 33, of Grand Prairie died at 2:40 p.m. at the 400 W. John Carpenter Freeway site, after an auger gear grabbed his flannel shirt and pulled him into the mixer, head first, Carr said. Brasewell was washing the truck when the incident occurred, officials said.

Police have ruled the death accidental.

Brasewell, a cement truck driver for Pioneer Concrete of Texas, had just delivered a load of cement to the site, where workers are constructing the new national headquarters for GTE Telephone Operations.

Two co-workers spoke with Brasewell shortly before the accident, then walked away, Carr said. When they returned several minutes later, Brasewell was trapped in the mixer gears, dead, Carr said.

There were no witnesses to the incident, he said.

Irving police were dispatched to the scene at 2:48 p.m., Carr said. The accident was Irving's third involving a worker on the job since November.

Lynn Brown dies

Lynn Brown, the only person ever to be elected mayor of Irving four times, died Monday in Williamsburg, Va. He was 76.

☐ Obituary — Page 6A

Brown — whose formal name was Lynn Irving Brown — was the youngest son of railroad surveyor Otis Brown, who along with colleague J.O. Schulze, founded Irving in 1903.

Even before he entered political service, Lynn Brown was deeply involved in the evolution of Irving from its earliest era as a truck-farming center through its explosive postwar growth.

Brown: Served four terms at helm of city

He was a civil engineer by profession, having graduated from the University of Texas on the eve of World War II. He served in the U.S. Navy Seabees, and most notably was involved in construction of an airfield on the Marianas island of Tinian, from which the Enola Gay carried the atom bomb that ended the war.

After the war, Brown returned home and joined with his brother Stanley to form the architectural and engineering firm of Brown and Brown, and a few years later, Lynn Brown formed his own company, Lynn Brown Co., which for years performed much of the local engineering work, literally shaping the physical dimensions of the city for years to come.

"He was one of the people most influential in the building of the city," recalled his nephew, Charles Brown.

Among the projects with which Lynn Brown was most notably associated was Northgate Drive, which today is a crucial east-west thoroughfare in North Irving.

He also performed the civil engineering work for many housing-development subdivisions in Irving, said Charles Brown, who worked for a while as a surveyor for his uncle.

"We surveyed the heck out of Irving," Charles Brown remarked.

According to friend Harry Spencer, Lynn Brown during the 1950s also prepared a master plan for Irving, which was then part of a country road district.

Brown served as mayor from 1959 to 1967, a period in which Irving came to be known as the "Fastest Growing City in Texas."

According to Irving: A Texas Odyssey by Joe Rice, Brown during his tenure as mayor worked to assure the city of a long-term water supply and negotiated with new industries. During that period, Frito-Lay Inc. came to Irving, and became one of the city's largest employers.

It was also a time when many cities were being very aggressive in annexing huge amounts of acreage, and Irving was no exception. One effort of interest came in 1963, when Brown and the City Council voted to annex about six miles of land along the Trinity River boundary with Dallas, a move that if it had been successful, would have put Irving's city limits around Commerce Street in downtown Dallas.

Internally, the city also progressed during Brown's terms as in November 1964, when a hospital — Irving Community Hospital — opened its doors with 100 beds.

Being mayor was a particularly meaningful experience for Brown, said his boyhood-to-adulthood friend, Charles O. Schulze.

"Lynn was so pleased to be mayor of Irving, due to the fact that his father was the first mayor of the city, in 1914," Schulze pointed out. "Lynn was utterly dedicated to the city."

Schulze recalled that, in 1959, Brown attended a conference of mayors representing cities with more than 50,000 in population.

"Even though Irving didn't have 50,000 people right then, everyone knew it would once the census was done," Schulze said, adding that such growth was a benchmark of Brown's tenure.

Schulze also noted that Brown spearheaded the first comprehensive study of Irving.

Another longtime friend, Jim Ratteree, noted that Brown's deep roots in Irving served the city well.

"He knew all the people who were here," Ratteree said. "He knew what his parents had in mind for Irving."

"He was a good leader for the time," Ratteree added, noting that Irving was pretty much a "do-it-yourself" city in those days.

"We didn't have much money for things then, and so when something needed to be done, you just got together a group of those of us who were around and figured out how to get it done," Ratteree said.

Services for Brown will be at 10:30 a.m. Friday at St. Luke's Catholic Church.
