IPD officer reprimanded after drowning incident

By REGINA STEFFEN
News Staff Writer

An internal investigation into the actions of a patrol officer has ended with a written reprimand being placed in the officer's file.

The investigation into the actions of Officer Gary Brockett was initiated after Brockett failed to locate a car reported to have been seen upside down in a reservoir in the 10000 block of North MacArthur Boulevard on Nov. 29.

Police say the inquiry's findings show Brockett should have more aggressively sought the site where a motorist drowned even though the accident apparently occurred hours before it was reported to police dispatchers.

On Nov. 29, a call was dispatched to Brockett at 10:30 a.m. about a "minor accident" at 10205 N. MacArthur Blvd. The dispatcher told Brockett that a caller said he had seen a car upside down in the reservoir.

When Brockett arrived at the location, he could not find the car. After he drove around the area and was not able to find the car, Brockett asked the dispatcher to contact the caller for further information. The dispatcher told Brockett that was not possible and Brockett cleared the call.

Seven hours later, at 5:30 p.m., the fire department received a call about a car upside down in the reservoir. The IFD dispatched an engine and found a 1992 Toyota Corolla partially submerged in the reservoir across the street from the Braxton's Mark Apartments.

Inside the vehicle was the body of 38-year-old Irving resident Alma Rose Fisher. The medical examiner ruled that Fisher had drowned.

A traffic investigation into the accident showed that Fisher Boulevard between 1:15 a.m. and 1:30 a.m. when her car hit a curb, flipped and slid into a reservoir just east of the roadway.

The fact that a call about the accident had been placed to the IPD seven hours before the car was found spurred the patrol division to investigate, although the first call did not come in until approximately nine hours after the accident occurred, police records show.

The key to the investigation, said Lt. Hugh Corbin of internal affairs division, was that Brockett misunderstood the location of the car.

"Based on that, it was felt that he should have either found it because he was told that it was in a reservoir or he should have gotten a clarification on the location of the car."

Two days after the accident, police spokeswoman Sydney Gomez said that Brockett "drove up and down MacArthur. Then he drove on the Avenue of Champions. The car was not visible from MacArthur or Avenue of Champions because of the embankment."

Gomez said Brockett then drove into the apartment complex parking lot to make sure the accident was not there.

At the time, patrol division Capt. Wardell Cox said that from the information he had, the car could not be seen from the roadway.

Corbin said that while Chief of Police Benny Newman did not have to sign Brockett's reprimand, he did stay abreast of the investigation.

"What the chief wanted to make perfectly clear was that this is not the level of attention to duty that we require. The reasons Brockett gave for not finding the car, while they may be something you can understand, they were not acceptable reasons," Corbin said.

Brockett is a four-year veteran of the Irving Police Depart-
