Woman jumps to her death from bridge

By LIZABETH CARDENAS
News Staff Writer

Left homeless after being evicted from her apartment, a 29-year-old Irving woman jumped to her death from an Irving Boulevard bridge Wednesday, according to police.

At 1:30 p.m., Linda Renee Hall jumped from a 33-foot-high bridge which crosses the intersection of MacArthur Boulevard and Rock Island Road, said Lt. Sid Fuller of the Irving Police Department.

Several people witnessed her jump in the “very busy intersection,” including an Irving police officer, Fuller said. The patrol officer was driving on Rock Island Road when he noticed Hall but could not get to her in time, he said.

“Some people across the street saw her walk across the ledge, stand there for a little while, then she dropped something and then jumped,” Fuller said. “It turned out to be a Bible. An officer was standing there too; he tried to turn around and get to her, but by the time he got there she had already jumped.”

Several people had called the police, but it all happened too fast for anyone to intervene, he said.

Hall struck her head when she landed in a concrete drainage ditch, Fuller said. Although Fuller describes the intersection as “very busy,” he said no other injuries or accidents resulted from her jumping.

Hall was taken to Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas, where she was pronounced dead at 2:50 p.m. According to police, she did not leave behind anything resembling a suicide note.

Hall had been evicted from The Willows apartments, 3304 Willow Creek Drive, two days before the incident, Fuller said.

“It appeared she was homeless after being evicted,” Fuller said.

According to Fuller, the woman had an ex-husband, but no other family in the area. She also had no job, he said.

Hall had been living by herself at The Willows, Fuller said. Police said they did not know the specific reason for her eviction, and the manager of the apartment complex would not comment.

Civic leader Holmes dies after brief illness

A generous, brilliant man who was willing to do anything for the welfare of the Irving community is how friends and family describe the late Henry Holmes.

Holmes, a pillar of the Irving community for nearly 20 years, died Monday at The Irving Hospital after a brief bout with cancer.

“He was a very generous person,” said Jim Ratteree, also very active in the Irving community. “He just wanted to please everybody and he was willing to do everything that needed to be done for the success of the community.”

Originally from Shamrock, Texas, Holmes came to Irving in the mid ‘70s and quickly earned a reputation as a prominent businessman. A banker by trade, Holmes used his experience as the president, stockholder and director of Coleman Bank and director and stockholder of Reagan State Bank, as well as partial owner of Corsicana National Bank, to establish the First National Bank of Irving. In 1976, he became the bank’s chairman of the board and chief executive officer.

“He was very generous in building our community with a small, independently-owned bank,” said Bob Nelson, president of Irving Rotary. “His generosity brought business to the forefront for the lender.”

Holmes’ commitment to the community also extended beyond his business sense. Service as an Irving Rotarian, an Irving Symphony board member and an Irving Hospital board member marked only a small portion of his community efforts. He also served on the board of directors of the Irving Public Library and as president of the Irving Symphony, Irving Rotary Club and the Cultural Affairs Council of Irving.

Those who knew Holmes said his influence on the community was a direct reflection of his generosity. They said it was that characteristic that also made him a good friend.

“I considered him my number one friend,” Ratteree said. “If I wanted to go have a hamburger, he was always ready to go with me. If I wanted to do something else, he was ready to do that, too.”

Carol Susat called Holmes a role model for all men.

“He was the typical southern gentleman. He was what most men should strive to be like.” Susat said the Irving community was made a better place simply for having been touched by his presence.

Holmes was born Jan. 7, 1918. He was 77 years old.

Survivors include his wife, Vivian Holmes of Irving; daughter and son-in-law, Ann and Jet Taylor of Flower Mound; sons and daughters-in-law, Ed and Kathy Holmes of Irving, and Fred and Donna Holmes of Dallas; sisters, Freda Kline of Round Rock and Gloria Mitchellmore of Houston; and six grandchildren.

Irving police officers held a ceremony behind the Criminal Justice Center Monday in memory of Glen Homs, the only Irving police officer killed in the line of duty.

More than 60 people watched a plaque presentation, held two years to the date of Homs' death. The plaque will be used as a marker in front of a tree planted last year in his memory.

Even after two years, Homs' memory still incites a great deal of emotion among fellow police officers. Amid prevailing silence and grief-stricken faces, the ceremony began with a posting of the colors.

As police officers spoke, tears filled the eyes of Christi Homs, his wife, who still works at the Irving Police Department dispatch office. Christi Homs' family was present to give support to her, in addition to Mayor Morris Parrish and City Manager Steve McCullough.

"This is something we don't want to be sorrowful about, even though two years ago we went through a great tragedy," officer Steve Woodard, president of the Irving Police Association told the crowd. "We don't want to dwell on this, but we want to remember him."

Homs was killed at age 30 by a drunk driver while he was responding to a traffic accident on July 3, 1993. He had served nine years with the Irving Police Department, including four years on the department's elite tactical team.

"We want to remember the leadership he provided the department in his capacity," Woodard said. "He touched almost every officer here in one way or another. We want to remember him as a friend. He helped shape the department; he was a leader on the team. And, most importantly, Glen represented the ultimate man as a husband and as a father."

Dallas Police Chaplain Stan Griffis reminded those in attendance that Homs' memory will always be alive — through examples he set and ideas he instilled.

Although ceremonies such as this one often bring back pain, public information officer David Tull said they also give the department strength.

"The police family does exist," Tull said, "and it's things like this that keep us pulled together."

Tull pointed out that Homs' death brought the issue of drunk driving "very close to home" for the police department.

And that effect has been one of the positive things to come out of such a tragedy, said IPD Officer Tom Shehan, who is one of three drug recognition experts at the department.

"I believe it turned into an instrument for people to pursue DWIs and enforce the DWI stat-ue more vigorously," Shehan said. "My views took a total turnaround. I didn't know what I wanted to specifically do at the department, but after Glen's death, I knew that the issue of drunk driving was going to be my concentration."

Shehan said Homs' death was a motivating factor to all the officers. Prior to his death, there were approximately 900 DWI arrests in 12 months, but following, there were about 1,400, he said.

Homs' death not only touched family, friends, police officers and the Irving community. The Texas House of Representatives unanimously adopted a resolution at the end of April to honor him.

Representative Will Hartnett said he was concerned about what happened to Homs because of the specific circumstances surrounding his death.

"I felt it was such a tragedy, such a senseless thing, and he deserved to be honored here, he deserves our recognition," Hartnett said.
Homs' family, friends try to block killer's parole

A drunk driver kills an Irving police officer, is convicted of involuntary manslaughter and is ordered to serve 10 years behind bars. Less than two years later, he is up for parole.

Family and friends of the victim are pleading with the parole board to deny the request and are urging other Irving citizens to join in their fight for justice.

Parole: Officer's family, friends seeking justice

"We believe in the justice system, and we feel justice should be served," said Sallie Homs, mother of IPD Officer Glen Homs, who was killed in the line of duty on July 3, 1993. "We want to make sure the justice system works. There's too much stuff happening these days, and we want to keep this from happening again."

Homs, 30, was killed while working a traffic accident when Daniel Kyle Williams, 27, of Arlington, was driving drunk and ran into him.

Williams was on probation at the time he killed Homs. According to the Brooks County clerks office, Williams was placed on deferred adjudication for five years for possession of marijuana on Jan. 20, 1993.

Following the accident which killed Homs, Williams' probation was revoked. He was then sentenced in November 1993 to 10 years for involuntary manslaughter with an aggravated deadly weapon, five years for failure to stop and render aid; and 10 years for possession of marijuana. Since he is serving his sentence concurrently, he only has to serve 10 years.

His case came before the parole board on July 18, and the review process can last for up to three to six months.

During this time, many people are sending letters to petition an early parole for Williams.

Texas State Rep. Ray Allen's office has a victim's assistance program and is currently circulating a petition to be given to the parole board on behalf of Homs Monday.

"Approximately 20 months is just not a sufficient amount of time for the killing of a police officer."

— Pam Knight

"Approximately 20 months is just not a sufficient amount of time for the killing of a police officer," said Pam Knight, Ray Allen's administrative assistant. "We don't want this man out and back on the streets."

The Irving Police Department, which has been devastated with Homs' death, is also participating in Allen's petition.

"Due to the nature of the crime, he should serve the entire sentence — the entire 10 years," said IPD Lt. Sid Fuller.

Fuller said the police department feels very strongly about this issue, and he added that the department will be "deeply offended if he is released."

Sallie Homs is asking for people in Irving who think Williams should serve the maximum sentence for their support.

Anyone interested can write the parole board within two weeks: Pardon and Parole Board, c/o Texas Department of Criminal Justice, P.O. Box 13401 Capitol Station, Austin, TX 78711.
