Families recovering after wreck

☐ 1 remains in serious condition with back injury

By LIZABETH CARDENAS
News Staff Writer

Most of the 15 passengers involved in the Thanksgiving weekend car crash in Colorado—which proved fatal for 4-year-old Evan Piano of Irving—seem to be recovering rapidly, relatives and hospital officials say.

"Everyone is real shaken up—it's rough for anybody in a situation like this," said Jaime Paxton, whose uncle, Phillip Paxton, was behind the wheel of the customized bus that crashed Saturday night just outside Denver. "Everyone is doing OK—as well as can be expected."

Irving residents Phillip Paxton, 36, and John Piano, 36, have been lifelong friends whose families vacation together every year. The two families along with another friend, Dan Leonard and his son, were on their way home from a ski trip to Breckenridge, Colo., when their bus veered off Interstate 70, about 45 miles east of Denver.

Three people were thrown from the vehicle, including Evan Piano.

But things are looking a little brighter for the families—only a few of the 13 passengers injured in the crash are still in the hospital, said Jaime Paxton.

Phillip Paxton, who is listed in fair condition at Swedish Medical Center in Denver, was moved from the intensive care unit Monday and probably will be released in the next few days, according to a hospital spokesperson.

Another victim among the more seriously injured, 10-year-old Amber Paxton, was listed in good condition Tuesday and probably will be discharged later in the week, said
