IPD probes murder case

Irving police are trying to piece together details of a homicide in which a Dallas man was found shot to death Monday in the doorway of an Irving apartment unit that contained several hundred pounds of marijuana.

Reynaldo Barbosa, 38, was transported to Parkland Memorial Hospital, where he died from a single gunshot wound to the chest.

Police, responding to a call of a possible

Murder: IPD probe under way

shooting, found Barbosa about 11:30 a.m. Monday in the doorway of an apartment at the Metker Place Apartments, located in the 700 block of Metker Drive.

When investigators arrived, the gunman had already fled the location. No arrests have been made, police said.

Although police do not know the circumstances behind the homicide, the fact that a large amount of illegal narcotics was recovered from the apartment signals a red flag, IPD spokesman David Tull said. Several hundred pounds of marijuana were seized from inside.

"That's a lot of marijuana — that's a sizable quantity of marijuana that was seized," Tull said. "We haven't gotten all the details yet, but it's a very distinct possibility that the drugs were a factor in the homicide. It's definitely one of the avenues we're looking into."

When police arrived at the scene, no one was at the apartment except for Barbosa, Tull said.

"He did not live at that apartment or even in the complex," Tull said. "We know who lives in the apartment — who leases it — but I can't say any more than that because that's also part of the investigation."

Tull said there did not appear to be signs of a struggle. However, he would not disclose whether police found signs of forced entry.

Police have been talking to possible witnesses in hopes of gathering more leads about who is responsible for the homicide, Tull said.

"We've talked to some people in the area, and that's part of what we're sorting through," Tull said.

Police also found a handgun near the apartment. Tests are being conducted to see if it is connected with the shooting, Tull said.

"I can't give the exact location of where the gun was found, but it was in the complex hidden nearby the apartment," Tull said.

Tull said police are not certain that the recovered handgun was the actual murder weapon, or even that it was involved in the homicide.

"At this point we're not sure what type of weapon was used to kill him, such as whether it was a handgun or a rifle," Tull said. "Early indications are that a large-caliber weapon was used to kill him."

Although police have many loose ends concerning the case, Tull said they do have enough evidence to get their investigation off the ground.

"It's not a clear-cut case — it's not obvious to police exactly what happened," Tull said. "But there are pieces we're trying to connect. We have some physical evidence to work with, but the investigation is going to take some time."

Teen charged in homicide

An 18-year-old Irving man has been charged with the murder of his Keller girlfriend, whom he allegedly stabbed multiple times in the throat before setting her on fire in a wooded area in Pennsylvania last week.

Hermitage, Pa., police filed one count of first-degree murder, which carries a life sentence without parole or death; one count of third-degree murder, which carries a sentence of 20-40 years; and an abuse of the corpse charge, a misdemeanor, against Andrew Michael Moore, a Nimitz High School graduate.

Moore is currently in a New York jail and Hermitage police are awaiting his extradition.

Moore and his girlfriend, Holly Bowden, 18, were traveling to a suburb of Buffalo, N.Y., where he had relatives, said Detective John Platek of the Hermitage Police Department. They were traveling in Bowden's 1995 Ford Mustang, he said. According to the Butler Eagle, Butler Penn Township police said Bowden ran away with Moore because her parents did not approve of their relationship.

The couple spent the night in Franklin, Pa., and then drove to Hermitage on Jan. 14, where he allegedly killed her, Platek said. She was stabbed at least 10 times in the neck in a wooded area along Interstate 80 in Hermitage. Then her body was set on fire, he said. She was killed between noon and 4 p.m., Platek said.

Moore then drove to Butler Penn Township, which is about 30 miles from Hermitage, and checked into Conley's Resort Inn, Platek said. He only stayed the night, he said.

Platek reported a series of events he said link Moore to the murder:

• A hunter found Bowden's partially burned body about noon Jan. 15 in a field near the Ohio border. She was fully clothed when she was found. Police did not know her identity at the time.

• A Conley's Resort Inn motel housekeeper called the Penn Township police on Jan. 16 explaining that a woman left behind her possessions. According to the Butler Eagle, Penn Township police said a blood-soaked shirt, as well as Bowden's identification, her jewelry and clothes, were found in the room, which was registered to Moore.

At that time, Penn Township police did not know that Bowden's body had been found.

Platek said police do not believe Bowden ever stayed at Conley's Resort Inn; she was already dead when Moore checked in, he speculated.

• Bowden's parents reported their car stolen and filed a missing person's report in Keller.

• Moore was arrested just outside Buffalo in a Holiday Inn parking lot because the license plates on the car did not match the car's registration, Platek said.

Police have still not recovered the murder weapon, Platek said. According to the Butler Eagle, police officials said Moore initially told authorities in New York, where he was in custody on stolen vehicle charges, that he was riding with Bowden, and that she ran away after they had an argument.
