Accident kills Dallas man

BY STEPHEN TERRY
News Staff Writer

A 27-year-old Dallas man suffered fatal injuries Monday after being struck by a truck in a southbound lane of Loop 12.

Reports indicate, at about 2:45 p.m., James Lee Smith of Dallas was pushing his disabled, gray 1985 Buick two-door vehicle along the shoulder in the 2300 block of South Walton Walker Boulevard. As the vehicle began to move, Smith stepped into the outside lane of traffic. Smith was then struck by a white 1989 Freightliner 18-wheeler driven by an unnamed 47-year-old Dallas man.

Police records state this was the city's fourth fatality accident of the year.

"Apparently, he (Smith) was trying to push the vehicle by himself," said David Tull, Irving police public information officer. "I don't think the driver's speed or intoxication was a factor in this accident."

No other injuries were reported from the accident.

Police said accidents like this could be avoided if drivers were more careful in handling their disabled vehicles.

"If your car breaks down, you need to get as far off the roadway as possible," Tull said. "You need to get and get help instead of trying to do it yourself. Even when changing a tire, you need to get completely off the roadway. You should call for police or a wrecker service, so you won't get hit by an oncoming vehicle trying to do it yourself."

Tull said no charges have been filed against the driver of the 18-wheeler in connection with the accident.
