Rites today for Jane Weems, 74, wife of late Texas author

Graveside services will be at 10 a.m. Wednesday at Hillcrest Cemetery on North Main Street in Temple, Texas, for Jane Homeyer Weems, wife of the late Texas author J. Eddie Weems Jr.

Ms. Weems, 74, died in her sleep Saturday at her home Gholson, Texas.

Ms. Weems was a regional manager for the Texas Department of Human Resources until retiring in 1987. She was passionately interested in nature and was a partner in one of her husband's books, relatives said.

She was chief researcher and collaborator on Mr. Weems' 1971 book, Dream of Empire: A Human History of the Republic of Texas. Their effort won several awards, including the Texas Institute of Letters prize for best work of history that year.

"Mother loved birds and flowers," said her daughter, Barbara Bereczki of Austin. "It was her consuming passion."

Ms. Weems recently moved to Gholson, where she was working with about 10 acres, planting native plants and grasses, her daughter said. She also had a large aviary.

Mr. Weems wrote 12 books under the pen name John Edward Weems, including his first, a 1957 account of the 1900 Galveston hurricane, A Weekend in September. He died last fall.

He and Ms. Weems, a native of Clarksville, Texas, married in 1946, shortly after she graduated from the University of Texas at Austin.

In addition to Ms. Bereczki, Ms. Weems is survived by three other daughters, Carol Collier of Kingston, Wash., Mary Ballew of Gholson and Janet Maple of Asheville, N.C.; and six grandchildren.
