No ruling possible on cause of death

Officials close cases of Irving girl, brother who died after infections

By LEE POWELL
Irving Bureau

IRVING — The cause of a 13-year-old Irving girl's death this summer cannot be determined, the Dallas County medical examiner's office has ruled.

Rachel Johnson died Aug. 18. Her 15-year-old brother, Matthew, died 10 days later.

The ruling on Rachel's death mirrors an earlier finding on Matthew's death.

In both cases, the medical examiner listed the cause and manner of death as "undetermined."

A pneumonia-type infection was found in Matthew and Rachel, according to the medical examiner.

But this was not labeled as a cause of death.

The findings effectively close the cases on the two youths, officials said.

It is unusual for the medical examiner to be unable to determine an official cause of death.

With Matthew's illness and

Rachel Johnson

Rachel's death, the city took the rare step of quarantining the Johnson family's east Irving home because of public health concerns.

A battery of environmental tests in the home found no contaminants, and the quarantine was soon lifted.

This week, the children's father released a statement through an Irving church saying the family had not seen the final autopsy results.

Ben Johnson said the family planned to have its own representatives look into the matter.

Their pastor, Steve Nutter of Community Bible Church, said this summer that all five Johnson children had walking pneumonia — a common infection that is usually not fatal in healthy individuals.

The three surviving children, ages 5, 10 and 17, were treated with antibiotics and recovered.
