NOTE: I know this is a duplicate, but the original owner, Don/Zas, is no longer with us and I found this great information that needed to be written for Daniel Thomas. Forgive me.

Dallas Morning News--Saturday January 6, 2007
by Joe Simnacher

Daniel Bert Thomas helped bring hospital pharmacists closer to the patients they served, but he was most proud of his role as a corpsman during the Battle of Iwo Jima.

Mr. Thomas, 81, died Sunday night at his Irving home, where he fell after an apparent heart attack, his family said.

"He was a well-respected past president of ours," said Paul F. Davis, executive director of the Texas Society of Health-System Pharmacists in Austin.

A memorial service will be at 3:30 p.m. today at Restland Funeral Home's Wildwood Chapel. His ashes will be buried at the Dallas-Fort Worth National Cemetery.

Mr. Thomas started his professional career in the early 1950's, when hospital pharmacies were relegated to the basement and largely considered drug storage rooms, Mr. Davis said.

Mr. Thomas intended to work his way through medical school as a pharmacist, but that plan changed because of health problems in his senior year. During his three years of medical school, he drew the wrath of doctors by counseling patients about the medications he was dispensing, a new practice at the time.

"Danny was one of those who took a larger role and...got pharmacy out of the basement," Mr. Davis said.

Mr. Thomas was a quiet man who spoke publicly for numerous causes, beginning with educating the public.

"He was really known in the 1960's and 1970's for doing public-health issues," Mr. Davis said. "He was on the drug-abuse speaking circuit."

Mr. Thomas spoke up to help people, including his fellow veterans, his family said.

"He was frugal in one way, but he was very generous in another," said his niece Catherine Shaw Holloway of Blossom, TX. "If anybody needed anything, he would be more than willing to give the shirt off his back to them."

Born in Blossom, Mr. Thomas was one of six children. He graduated from high school in Paris, TX, and later joined the NAVY.

During World War II, he served as a fleet hospital corpsman and was attached to the 4th Marine Division. At Iwo Jima, he treated a wounded Marine while under intense mortar fire, organizing a rescue team and fashioning a litter from a poncho so the man could be evacuated. He received a BRONZE STAR with VALOR for his efforts.

Mr. Thomas said little about his combat experience for 50 years. Mrs. Holloway said two events seemed to help him open up: a severe stroke in 1998 and seeing the World War II movie 'Saving Private Ryan'.

"After he had the stroke and was recovering, he had a lot of hallucinating. But when it was all over with, he started talking and writing about his experiences," Mrs. Holloway said.

Mr. Thomas contributed his memories to a book and two movies, Mrs. Holloway said.

He corresponded with James Bradley for the book, 'Flags of Our Fathers', and met with Clint Eastwood, who directed the movie adaptation.

In 2001, Mr. Thomas returned to Iwo Jima as part of the documentary 'Price for Peace', which was produced by Steven Spielberg.

After the war, Mr. Thomas returned to Paris, TX, before enrolling at the University of Texas College of Pharmacy in Austin.

He was recalled to active duty at graduation in 1950 and was granted special permission to take his Texas pharmacy board exam orally.

He served during the Korean War as pharmacy director at the Navy hospital at Port Hueneme, CA, where he was stationed for three years.

After his recall duty was complete, he enrolled at what is now UT Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas. A heart arrhythmia, however, forced Mr. Thomas to drop out of medical school in his 4th year. He opted to be a career pharmacist.

In 1954, he went to work for Irving Community Hospital, now part of the Baylor system. He later worked at Methodist Hospital before becoming a retail pharmacist at Stevens Park Pharmacy.

While he was at the Irving hospital, he became a leader with the Texas Society of Hospital Pharmacy and served as the group's president in 1969-70.

Mr. Thomas helped the druggist group separate from the UT College of Pharmacy. He wore sandwich boards to help recruit members, according to a 2004 Texas Society of Hospital Pharmacy Journal article.

Mr. Thomas retired from pharmacy work in 1995.

In addition to publicly speaking about Iwo Jima and preventive medicine, Mr. Thomas was an advocate for the handicapped.

His late sister, Catherine Gale Thomas, had Spina Bifida.

"He did a lot of work with the DART System, when they were putting in the accessibilities for the handicapped," Mrs. Holloway said.

Mr. Thomas attended the signing of the Americans with Disabilities Act in Washington.

Mr. Thomas did not marry and leaves no immediate survivors, but he was close to his nieces and nephews.
